- Beautiful portraits of three women, all over the age of 60. Photographer Irene van Nispen-Kress followed these women for six years, capturing moments from their everyday lives, proving that old age can be a woman's greatest asset

The general picture we have of older people does not seem to reflect today's 60-70 year-olds at all. Driven by her own feeling of having a 'best before' date, photographer Irene van Nispen Kress examined what it's really like to be older these days. For six years she followed three older women in the intimacy of their day-to-day lives. With the help of her camera, she provided a glimpse into the lives of women who, because of their age, are usually not in the limelight at all. These powerful images and stories illustrate why the passage of time can be a woman's greatest asset.
