- Photographer Andrea Baumgartl captures moving scenes of young people from across the globe, demonstrating against global climate change

Young people around the world have been following the example of Greta Thunberg and demonstrating for climate protection as part of 'Fridays for Future'. Week after week since 2018, they have called emphatically for political ramifications in order to finally stop the dangerous effects of global climate change. The photographer Andrea Baumgartl (*1965) has accompanied these demonstrations from the very beginning. At close proximity and with great empathy, she shows the determination with which young people are fighting self-confidently for their future. Her new book is a highly topical, moving, and rousing contemporary document.

Text in English and German.
