

Christian Krohg
Pictures that captivate
 Edited by Vibeke Waallann Hansen
 Nils Ohlsen
 Erik Mørstad
 Terje Borgersen
 Trond E. Aslaksby

| | |
|------------------|------------------------|
| ISBN | 9788281540675 |
| Publisher | National Museum, Oslo |
| Binding | Hardback |
| Territory | World excluding Norway |
| Size | 275 mm x 216 mm |
| Pages | 208 Pages |
| Price | £18.00 |

- Accompanying catalogue to an exhibition at the National Museum from 15 June to 16 September 2012

Christian Krohg was a key figure in the Norwegian art community of the 1880s and 1890s, and was strongly influenced by the ideology of realism. In his view, art should have meaning for a broad segment of the population, not merely serve as wall decorations for the bourgeoisie. Three types of motifs were recurrent themes for Krohg during this period: the working-class hero, scenes from family life and "the fallen woman". Many people responded to his literary and visual representations of the poverty-stricken girl Albertine. He depicted members of the working class with great sympathy in paintings such as Errand Boy Drinking Coffee and Woman Cutting Bread. The Gaihede family, fishermen from Skagen in Denmark, are portrayed in many everyday situations, as are members of Krohg's own family. The catalogue sheds light on the subject matter of the exhibition, Krohg's period of study in Berlin and its impact on him, his relationship with Georg Brandes, the novel Albertine and Krohg's own use of photography as a model for his work and a medium.

Text in English and Norwegian.

