- This book proves a city is more than just a collection of buildings, parks and lanes
- A city has a soul, brought to life by its inhabitants
- Featuring over 100 portraits

This book features over 100 portraits of city people in their habitat; it portrays people of Antwerp, but they represent city people worldwide. These are people whose activities give colour to their city's rich multicultural society. With open, honest stories explaining what they think is important and giving a face to all people that live in a city this book proves that a city is more than just a collection of buildings, parks and lanes. A city has a soul, brought to life by its inhabitants.

Werner Van Reck, born 1959, studied advertising design and photography and went on to establish his own advertising agency, LDV/United Antwerp, in 1991. As creative director, he was responsible for creations for national and international brands. He lives and works in Antwerp, where else?
