- Part of the Discovering board book series
- Includes a host of detachable cardboard figures and characters that can be mounted on pedestals and used to create imaginary stories and adventures
- Suitable for ages: 5 plus

This new series of large board books was developed for children aged 5 plus to teach them about ancient history using a fun, playful approach. It includes short, simple texts that examine some of the aspects of relevant civilisations in an easy but captivating manner, as well as detachable cardboard figures and characters that can be mounted on pedestals and used to create imaginary stories and adventures. In the second book in the series, Vikings and their seafaring endeavours are centre stage. Short informative texts and detachable figures help readers to discover everything about the Drakkar ship, the greatest achievements of the Viking explorers, how they organised their villages and about the Nordic divinities they worshipped. Ages: 5 plus Federica Magrin born in Varese in 1978, has worked in publishing for over 10 years, first as editor of Edizioni De Agostini and now as a freelance. She mainly works in children's books, but also writes educational texts and stories and translates novels. For White Star Kids she has produced the book City Atlas.
