- Italian designer Francesca Liberatore (1983) has worked for some of the biggest fashion houses in the world

Francesca Liberatore worked for Viktor & Rolf in Amsterdam, Jean-Paul Gaultier in Paris and Brioni Womenswear in Italy, before launching her own brand around 2009. This book, presenting designs and stylistic inspirations of great intercultural richness, is structured in a four-section journey (London, Paris, Milan, New York) that represent the significant phases of the young fashion designer's professional growth. Gathering its experience in these pages, it allows to spread with renewed vigor the Italian style that the new generations – whom Francesca Liberatore represents – interpret all over the world.

Text in English, Italian, French and Chinese.
