- For three years, photographer Janina Wick has portrayed young people on the ruinous outskirts of Berlin city in a haunting contemporary portrayal of present-day youth culture

Collapsing industrial buildings and overgrown wastelands suggest that Berlin's Schöneweide district once experienced a different present. Today, the numerous abandoned sites provide a place for many young people to meet in secret. Over three years, photographer Janina Wick established contact with them and visited them, explored the abandoned sites, portrayed the youngsters and also captured the architectural changes. With fresh design, the book documents her perceptive observations and research into youth culture.

Text in English and German.
