

Lill Tschudi

The Excitement of the Modern Linocut 1930–1950

Edited by Graphische Sammlung ETH Zurich

Edited by Alexandra Barcal

ISBN	9783039420575
Publisher	Scheidegger & Spiess
Binding	Hardback
Territory	World excluding Austria, Germany, Switzerland, Puerto Rico, United States, Canada, and Japan
Size	275 mm x 225 mm
Pages	112 Pages
Illustrations	50 color
Price	£35.00

- First new book on Swiss artist and printmaker Lill Tschudi for decades
- Features some 50 of her unique linocuts
- Lill Tschudi enjoys lasting recognition as an accomplished printmaker in the Anglo-Saxon world until the present day and her works fetch good prices at auctions
- Text in English and German

The short intermezzo between the Great War and World War II and especially the “roaring twenties” with their a thrill of speed were a period of radical social change and artistic development, and of vibrant metropolitan life and. Born into a merchant family in the Swiss mountain canton of Glarus, Lill Tschudi (1911–2004) moved to London in 1929 to educate herself at the Grosvenor School of Modern Art. She flourished in the imperial capital and soon gained wide recognition for her bold and often colourful modernist linocuts. In the Anglo-Saxon world her reputation as an accomplished printmaker has lasted and her works continue to fetch good prices at auctions in Britain and Australia. New York’s Metropolitan Museum of Art holds some 120 of her prints in its permanent collection, while she has until to date never been distinguished with a solo exhibition in a public museum in her native Switzerland.

This book, published to coincide with the first such display at Graphische Sammlung ETH Zurich, features some 50 of her unique linocuts. Designed as a proper picture book, it shows her refined and expressive compositions with their captivating narrative in full-page plates, which are supplemented by informative essays.

Text in English and German.

The Graphische Sammlung ETH Zurich, the Swiss Federal Institute of Technology's collection of prints and drawings, is one of the largest collections in this field in Switzerland, containing some 160,000 high-quality artworks on paper from the 15th century to the present day.

Alexandra Barcal is deputy head and conservator of 20th and 21st-century art at Graphische Sammlung ETH Zurich.