- Presents photographic 'portraits' of shopping trolleys in unusual places
- Text in English and German

Shopping carts: they stand in front of supermarkets day in and day out without attracting any attention. But when they are removed from their usual surroundings, they develop a strange power of attraction. In Berlin, shopping carts are frequently, quite often in nocturnal 'actions,' repositioned, knocked over, hung up, or loaded with curious things. Over two years, the photographer Luca Ellena (*1997) 'portrayed' numerous shopping carts in such unusual surroundings. This has resulted in an absurd artist's book filled with unexpected stories that we can only imagine.
