Painter, photographer, cinematographer, Paolo Gioli (Rovigo, 1942) is one of the most innovative Italian artists of recent decades, especially for his ability to experiment across multiple fields, and through his reworked devices.

Published on the occasion of three exhibitions held in Italy and China, this book examines the films and photographic works – polaroids, photo finishes, silkscreen canvases and lithographic plates – created over a 50-year period, suggesting a theoretical-iconographic path that revolves around four sections: Nature, Body, Face, and Medium.

This volume is accompanied by a rich array of colour illustrations, with film datasheets commented by the author himself, and gives a detailed account of all of the works presented, along with critical contributions from leading international scholars.

Text in English, Italian, and Chinese.
