"Sarajevo to Paris, fashion or reportage, deciding on the title of a book is mind-boggling. I call myself a documentary photographer that accidentally ended up doing fashion. The end of the 80s was an interesting and intense time in world history, and a particularly creative time in the world of fashion. As a young female photographer I was interested in both worlds. Thirty years later, when looking back, those two worlds — documentary and fashion — still define my work. Both are equally represented in my archives. This book, of my fashion work, is the first to be published. I called it Sarajevo to Paris because sometimes I would travel directly from one to the other. These two cities had a big impact on my life."*

Sarajevo to Paris by Marleen Daniëls captures the set before the fashion show. This robust encyclopaedia is an A-Z of designers preparing for the big moment. Over the course of 30 years she photographed backstage in Paris, London, New York and Milan.

Marleen Daniëls (°1958) is a Belgian photographer, primarily a documentary photographer who accidentally but simultaneously documented a large portion of the backstage area at fashion shows before it ever became a thing to do, positioning her as one the first photographers to embrace this scene, sneaking into shows with her point-and-shoot, Marleen captured monumental fashion times including designers that are no longer with us such as Alexander McQueen, Issey Miyake and Karl Lagerfeld.
