

The Art of Being Unhappy

Dirk De Wachter

ISBN	9789059967328
Publisher	Lannoo Publishers
Binding	Paperback / softback
Territory	World excluding Benelux France, Switzerland & Scandinavia
Size	220 mm x 140 mm
Pages	112 Pages
Name of series	Lannoo Campus
Price	£25.00

- How can we adjust our aims, from the need for constant highs to a long lasting, strengthening form of contentment?
- Antidote to individualism, and an ode to the power of nearness and community
- Optimistic, highly readable take on modern society

Striving for happiness as the purpose of life, as we are led to believe is a pillar of modern society, is a mistake. It leads us nowhere, except towards a bitter confrontation with unmet expectations, disappointment and disillusion. Striving for meaning and purpose in being close to others, on the other hand, is what life is all about. Our society has become an arena of peak performance: of always striving to be better, to go further, and to aim higher. What's worse: we hardly ever stop to consider that the highs don't fill up our lows. We fail to distinguish between experiences that make us happy for a brief moment, and those that truly impart meaning to our lives, those that breed true contentment. But how can we grow to make that distinction ourselves? The answer lies in how we relate ourselves to the ones around us. That makes all the difference. With The Art of Being Unhappy, multi-bestselling author Dirk De Wachter lays bare major issues in our society that define, direct, or change our lives, but above all, allow us to connect with others as well as ourselves – if we let them.

Dirk De Wachter is a multi-bestselling author and psychiatrist-psychotherapist, serving as head of the Systemic and Family Therapy department at the University Psychiatric Center of KU Leuven, Kortenberg campus. He is also a trainer and supervisor in family therapy at various centres both in Belgium and abroad. The Art of Being Unhappy has sold over 100,000 copies in Belgium and the Netherlands, and has been translated into French, Arabic, Complex Chinese and Czech.