- Encourages big kids and preteens to explore their dreams and inner world, while also introducing children to the differences across cultures
- A truly captivating and charming way to get children reading and then engaging them in stimulating conversation

“I just had the most incredible dream!” “Pay attention; stop daydreaming!” “It was only a nightmare.”… Dreaming takes place in a dimension of its own, difficult to define and hard to study. Nonetheless it remains a routine and ever-present part of our human experience. So, what do we know about the mechanics of dreaming? Where and how do dreams appear in our sleeping mind? What role do they play in shared culture and differences across cultures? How can we make meaning of them when desired? This fascinating and must-have book dives into the world of dreams and provides explanations and prompts for curious young readers.

Ages 8 plus.

Tommaso Vidus Rosin is an illustrator, graphic designer, and cartoonist, as well as Creative Director of the Italian design studio, Studio Quadrato. Sara Beltrame graduated with honourable mention from the Holden School, and is a screenwriter, journalist, and writer.
