- Oswald the virus will teach children that they don't have to be scared of him and his fellow viruses, but instead to face them with the right knowledge
- Suitable for ages: 4 plus

Fear is a natural emotion and, however irrational, it can be rationalised for the little ones by showing its causes and methods of action. In this book, children will be explained what viruses are – a more-than ever actual topic, how they move and what behaviours help to limit their spreading. The texts style is fun and light, with ironic notes and scientific background, while the lively illustrations help to deliver what could be a complicated message with an immediate understanding. A new series for the little ones to face every fear with science. Oswald the virus will teach in first person that children don't have to be scared of him and his fellow viruses, but instead to face them with the right knowledge. Ages: 4 plus

Victor Medina was born in Madrid, in 1991. He is a freelance illustrator with predilection for the smallest details; likes to use bright colours add hand lettering to his projects. His obsession with Victorian and Art Deco eras definitely influences his style, as well as the illustration and design from the 1950s. He graduated in Graphic Design at Universidad Complutense de Madrid.
