France's sun-soaked 'second city' hums with creativity, inventive food and spectacular scenery, from the rugged Calanques to the glowing Côte d'Azur beaches. The oldest and most diverse city in France, its port has welcomed waves of migrants for thousands of years, shaping a character that is warmer than Paris and cooler than Nice – a captivating patchwork of winding old-town streets and bold contemporary architecture, globe-spanning eateries and groundbreaking art. What's not to love?

Sandrine Faure writes about travel, food, and all the destinations she can reach by train. She grew up in Marseille and returns often, lured by the hum of art spaces hidden in old factories, cult pizza vans and warm navettes (in no particular order).
