- More than 150 images from across the globe, presented in a collectible and giftable book
- Includes both photographs and lesser-seen architectural renderings

All around us, whether harmoniously landscaped or assertively reclaimed by nature, plants are strikingly intertwined with our built environment. Featuring more than 150 images of breathtaking green buildings from across the globe – from the sweeping sky gardens of Singapore to the eco-Brutalism of the Barbican Conservatory – this extraordinary photographic collection reveals the thriving relationship between plants and architecture. Organic, surprising, and verdantly alive.
