a+u's November issue features the most recent wave of construction in Berlin. Thirty-two years have passed since the fail of the Berlin Wall – a period longer than the life of the wall itself – and the city has entered a new phase of normalization, with the genre, styles, and values of architecture being decidedly different from those of the post-Reunification euphoria. While of the 16.08 provides a comprehensive index to the landmarks of Berlin from Schinkel to the post-Reunification construction boom, this issue highlights 14 recent works that range from the restoration of Neueum to the conversion of an abandoned grocery store in the former East Berlin into a residence. They are representative of this new chapter in the city's remarkable history. A series of thematic essays, on Museum Island, on Schinkelplatz, on the Tempelhof site, on building groups,
