Chinese Wild Plants in Botanical Illustration is one of two companion titles, each presenting 300 beautiful, hand-drawn illustrations of China's native plants. This first title looks at plants in ecosystems and the landscape; their history and the importance of their survival. From common wildflowers and wild grasses to rarer species found on mountains and in forests, these botanical artworks reveal the extraordinary in what we commonly take to be the ordinary. With her uncanny ability to bring real life to the page, illustrator Wu Xiuzhen exposes the exceptional beauty that is inherent in the natural world all around us.

Wu Xiuzhen, a nature illustrator, is a contracted painter of the Ecological Museum of the Anji Pavilion of Zhejiang Nature Museum and Jiande Museum. She has been contributing to Chinese National Geographic and Natural Science for a long time, and an invited artist for stamp collection by Guyana's "2019 World Rose Intercontinental Congress". Some of her paintings have been collected by many institutions and individuals. She is now committed to creation of illustrations and picture books with natural themes such as plants, animals, birds and insects.
