Working as a vet in a large zoo is a dream job for many—but for Tim Bouts, it's reality. As Chief Veterinary Officer, he has spent over 20 years caring for animals in world-renowned parks like London Zoo. Today, he works at the Sheikh of Qatar's 'Panda House.' In this book, he shares remarkable stories from his diverse range of patients: a lion battling Covid, a hippopotamus with tuberculosis, a tigress with dental issues, and a gorilla suffering from chronic pain. Some of his anecdotes are heartwarming, like his first successful surgery, or welcoming baby pandas to Pairi Daiza in Belgium. Others are pulse-pounding, such as the failed anesthesia of an antelope, and the escape of two chimpanzees. And some are deeply moving, like the euthanasia of a herd of herpes-stricken elephants or the heartbreakingly loss of a walrus mother and her calf. Through these stories, you'll get a front-row seat to Tim's daily work and a rare glimpse into his thoughts. He doesn't shy away from sensitive topics like euthanasia, contraception in zoos, and the challenges of quarantining animals.

Tim Bouts began his career as a veterinary surgeon at London Zoo and Whipsnade Zoo before working at several international wildlife parks. Today, he is the Zoological Director of the Sheikh of Qatar's renowned Panda House and travels the world on special assignments. He played a key role in rescuing the critically endangered Spix's macaw from extinction, helping to establish breeding programs and ultimately reintroducing the birds to their natural habitat in Brazil.

His having trouble hearing. "The difficulty with hearing is that it's a very personal problem," says Dr. John C. Gammie, director of audiology at the University of Michigan. "It's not like a head and shoulder sore that can be seen or aggravated." The only way to know if you have a hearing problem is to have a hearing test. "The most important thing is to make sure to have one," he says. "Most people don't realize how bad their hearing is until they're told." Many people do realize it, however, if the memory of the last time they heard a conversation with a friend or a speech at a social gathering is a painful one. "It's a reminder that something is wrong with the hearing," he says. "And that's the easiest condition to treat."

As a result, it's important to make an appointment with your doctor of audiology as soon as possible. "If you don't have one in your area, you can call the American Academy of Audiology at 800/338-3733 and they'll give you the name of a doctor near you," says Dr. Gammie. "You can also go to the Web site of the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association at www.asha.org and click on 'Find a Professional' to find a doctor near you." If you look long enough, you'll find a doctor who's good at what he does, and that's the best way to ensure that you'll be getting the best care possible.
