- Reveals impressive new insights into the middle ages

Today's world is the product of the late middle ages. In what is now called 'Flanders', a new kind of man emerged. A practical man, an entrepreneur, a critical man who no longer believed what church and nobility tried to tell him. He discovers the world, creates, produces and innovates. In this book young researchers take us back to the middle ages. With attention for top works of art and unknown gems. This art book has a fresh academic point of view: the economical history of the middle ages from the viewpoint of different social groups, with surprising results on clichéd thoughts such as the passive countryside, the dark middle ages and the role of women in society.

Peter Stabel teaches social and economic history of the middle ages at Antwerp University. He was a guest lecturer at University of Pennsylvania and Sorbonne in Paris. Véronique Lambert has a doctorate in history and a Master's degree in cultural management. She lectured at the universities of Ghent and Antwerp. In 2015, she founded a research agency called Verbo Vero, dedicated to history research, cultural projects, and communication. Prof. dr. Tim Soens lectures medieval history and ecological history at Antwerp University.
