- Published to celebrate the centennial of Maison Guiette: a visionary and modernist icon designed by Le Corbusier
- Le Corbusier (born Charles-Édouard Jeanneret-Gris; 1887–1965) was a pioneering Swiss-French architect, urban planner, and painter
- Maison Guiette remains his only surviving building in Belgium
- This volume honors the meticulous restoration by Ann Demeulemeester and Patrick Robyn, whose profound commitment to and respect for this modernist legacy played a major role in preserving the residence

This architecture book weaves history, restoration, and daily experience into a layered portrait of Maison Guiette, from its inception to the most recent interventions. Historical documents and correspondence between Le Corbusier and Guiette bring the original vision to life, while reflections from past and present residents highlight both the continuity and fragility of the heritage.

Furthermore, the house was meticulously restored by Ann Demeulemeester and Patrick Robyn. Their commitment to and respect for this modernist legacy played a major role in preserving the residence. Finally, Victor Robyn's photography captures the house in its daily rhythm: light, usage, and detail as silent witnesses to life inside the home.

Bénédicte Gandini graduated from the Faculty of Architecture at the Politecnico di Milano (Italy) in 1999, specializing in restoration theory and the preservation of historic architectural heritage. Since 2005, as an architect for the Fondation Le Corbusier, she has been responsible for the conservation of Le Corbusier's architectural works.
