• A coloring book filled with exquisite templates, allowing you to step in to the shoes of Romulus and Remus as you bring the eternal city to life

Rome Wasn't Drawn in a Day is a coloring book filled with exquisite templates, allowing you to step in to the shoes of Romulus and Remus as you bring the eternal city to life. Use your own artistic direction to turn DolceQ's intricate illustrations into a beautiful and personal souvenir of Rome. Reimagine some of Rome's iconic landmarks by fusing floral and geometric patterns with both ancient and modern architecture. Explore the contrast between the sharp outline of the Altare Della Patria with the intricately detailed patterns that surround it. Sketch the skyline of St Peters whilst the wolves howl from below. Trace the Tiber with your pencil and view Rome from above. Color the vibrant culture of Rome, from rappers to mythical creatures, from ancient monuments to contemporary art museums. The book outlines the beauty of past and present Rome in a series of templates, offering a truly unique way to relax, explore the city and create a work of art.

DolceQ is a creative studio founded in Rome in 2005 by Massimiliano Panzironi and Sonia Di Rubbo. Dolce Q is very open to the boundaries between art and commercial graphic design, having seen a great variety of different techniques used, and reflected in projects for clients from widely different fields. Publications, exhibitions and products around the world enable the DolceQ project to keep itself in a progress of continual renewal and to widen its contacts from Rome, the capital of Italy, in line with the city's motto: eternal beauty. Engaged in illustration, graphic design, video art and architecture Panzironi has worked with many companies including Coca Cola, Taschen, PlayImaginative, Ministero degli Interni, Poste Italiane, IDN and JTW to name a few. Panzironi exposed his works as an artist in London, Tokyo, Los Angeles, Taipei, Santiago de Chile, Miami, San Diego, Milano, Roma and Bologna.
