- Intimate portraits of single parent fathers alongside stories of love, loss and the healing power of family
- Harry Borden's first book, Survivor: A Portrait of The Survivors of the Holocaust (Octopus), was a bestseller and described by esteemed philosopher and author Alain de Botton as a 'masterpiece'

The image of the single dad is often distorted by out-of-date notions of masculinity – the strong and resilient father, the working father, the emotionally distant dad. In this book, esteemed portrait photographer, Harry Borden, himself a separated father with four children, reveals the vulnerabilities, tenderness and love of 48 single fathers. Each has suffered a loss and struggled to adjust to being the main carer but through their heartache and with the help of their children they have come to a renewed sense of love and purpose. This book contributes to the ongoing debate about what it is to be a man in the modern world.

Harry Borden is a world-renowned portrait photographer whose work resides in the permanent collection of the National Portrait Gallery, London.
