- A new perspective on alcohol-free drinks: non-alcoholic drinks as a creative and sophisticated part of the culinary experience, not simply an alternative to wine
- Ancient techniques reimagined: Explore the power of ingredients through forgotten techniques such as fermentation, maceration, infusion, extraction and pickling, inspired by traditions from around the world

The world of alcohol-free drinks is evolving rapidly. In this book, Bram Klinge – who develops non-alcoholic drinks for several of Europe's leading chefs – shares the results of years of research and experimentation. Through extensive hands-on exploration, he has gained a deeper understanding of the power of ingredients, their synergy with nature, and the rediscovery of centuries-old techniques from all corners of the world, including pickling, extraction, maceration, fermentation and infusion. What makes Bram Klinge so unique in the eyes of many top chefs is that he does not simply see non-alcoholic drinks as an alternative to wine. Instead, he creates and presents them with the same creativity, precision and respect, offering guests a truly unique experience.

Bram Klinge is an international bar manager, sommelier and drinks consultant specializing in non-alcoholic pairings and bar menus. With a background in hospitality and a deep passion for wine and flavor, he works with chefs and restaurants to develop sophisticated drinks that complement food rather than simply replace alcohol. His approach combines creativity, technique and a curiosity for ingredients, bringing a fresh perspective to the evolving world of alcohol-free gastronomy.
