- Only journal of its kind in North America that reaches a broad readership that includes design professionals, academics, students, and the design and architecture enthusiasts alike

The scholarly journal produced by the Institute of Classical Architecture & Art (ICAA) is now in its tenth issue and continues to serve as an inspiration for professionals, academics, and enthusiasts alike. This volume is richly illustrated with drawings, photographs, renderings, watercolors, and details in full color. Essays include contributions by Jana Vandergoot on the traditions of 'urban food' in Rome and Paul Gunther on the stunning work produced by the ICAA's Beaux-Arts Atelier and Grand Central Academy of Art. The work of other schools is also represented through student portfolios from the University of Bologna, Notre Dame, Yale, Judson, Miami, the American College of Building Arts, and The Prince's Foundation for Building Community. A wide range of professional work from across the country is featured in the "From the Offices" portfolio, reflecting regional application of traditional and classical forms.
